

Thursday 2nd April 2020

LO: To create the falling action of my story.

In the falling action, the climatic event should begin to settle and the characters should begin to feel safer. It brings the story towards the end gradually. Use the same picture stimulus to continue your story.

Example:

The beautiful temple was a pile of useless stone. They had destroyed it. Standing up slowly, the pair looked back at what remained.

"What have we done?" Jane cried. "It's gone, it's all gone."

Jane's eyes began to flood and her clear, crystal blue pupils were lost in a sea of salty tears. Guilt filled her soul. "Jane, it wasn't your fault. We didn't know that would happen. We have the jewel now, that's all that matters!" Hans tried to comfort Jane but it wasn't working.

"The jewel?? I don't care about the jewel! It means nothing!" Jane stroked the jewel in her filthy hand and saw her sad reflection stared back at her. "It isn't ours Dad, what have we done?"

Sensing what his daughter was doing, greedy Hans tried to gently remove the ruby jewel from her grip. Jane wouldn't let go. Pulling and tugging and each other's hands, the jewel flew into the dusty air and landed abruptly in the murky pond water. "Well it's done now Dad. Look what we've done." Jane whimpered.