

A Cloudy Lesson

Yesterday, you wrote instructions detailing 'How to make a cloud'

Today, you can be creative. I would like you to think of another type of weather (e.g. thunder, lightning, snowflakes, raindrops...) and create a set of instructions explaining how they can be made. This is not scientific; you can make these weather events in any way you wish.

I look forward to seeing some, so please do email them to me when you are finished.

Steps to success:

- Bullet pointed list of things you will need
- Subheading introducing the instructions
- Numbered instructions
- Time adverbials to order the instructions chronologically
- Adverbs to add detail (carefully, swiftly...)

Instructions need to be clear but not so brief that I a reader would struggle to complete the task without confusion.
